Blades of glory Essentially the only thing you need to do in Fruit Ninja is to swipe your finger across the screen to wield your sword. You must slice every piece of fruit that is thrown up from the bottom of the screen. If you miss a piece before it falls back off the screen, you lose a life too.Fruit Ninja is one of the rogue bombs that come flying up, you lose a life too.Fruit is so satisfying that it keeps you coming back for more and more in an effort to beat your high score. Though the gameplay is very repetitive, the developer of Fruit Ninja, Halfbrick, has done plenty to keep your attention for longer. There are three game modes: Classic, Arcade, and Zen (though each is pretty similar), and a whole bunch of power-ups, swords, and backgrounds to unlock. You'll need to level up and collect coins to unlock all the goodies, which you do by racking up high scores and completing challenges. Fruit Ninja allows you to match yourself up against your Facebook or Google+ buddies, competing to see who has the highest score. This is as far as multiplayer goes though, and I for one would like to see some kind of real time head-to-head or split-screen mode in Fruit Ninja.Hack-athonThe hacking and slashing controls in Fruit Ninja are very simple to pick up. All you need to worry about is swiping your finger across the screen as fast as you can. Actually, there's more to it than that, since you need to be careful to avoid bombs and time your slashing right so you can slice multiple fruits at once to earn combos. Splat happyThe look and feel of Fruit Ninja is excellent. From the realistic splat sound of pineapples being hacked open to the fact that all menu icons must be selected by slicing them, the attention to detail in Fruit Ninja is presented by a cast of fun characters who pop up from time to time to give you hints or interact in some way. Sweet gameplayIf you're looking for a fun game of skill to kill some time, Fruit Ninja is a peach of a choice. It's great for picking up on a train or a bus, though you may find it repetitive after a while.
